1993 four corners hantavirus outbreak
May 4th, 2020 — The 1993 four corners hantavirus outbreak was an outbreak of hantavirus that caused the first known human cases of hantavirus disease in the United States. It occurred within the four corners region — the geographic intersection of the U.S. states of Utah, Colorado, New Mexico, and Arizona — of the southwestern part of the country. On mid-1993, this region is largely occupied by Native American tribes.
