Few images capture a moment in American history as clearly as Walker Evans' groundbreaking 1938 monograph American Photographs and his 1941 collaboration with author James Agee, Let Us Now Praise Famous Men. A pioneer of documentary photography, Evans catalogued the essence of 20th-century America in his photographs of main streets, churches, factories, and New York City's slums. His early encounter with Europe in the late 1920s prompted inspiration from French photographer Eugène Atget and German photographer August Sander.
